pleasure for me to read it! Von Doortalks Two people lose each other due to unhappy coincidences and find themselves again due to a happy one - but can they step over their past and find the way to each other? As it is a beautiful romance I may not tell a secret when I say - yes, they can. It has a happy end. :-) This book was my partner during last days - days filled with a lot to do, days full of stress. Every time I took it in my hands (well my iPad) it gave a much needed rest to my mind. The characters are very lively, the story well woven, there were many curves in which the heroes and heroines went to make it very interesting. It was a book you would not want to lay down but read it till the end. The story happens in years 18something. I rarely read not modern romances but I was nicely surprised not to be overloaded with historical details. It was very pleasant to have nearly modern heroes with no modern technologies :-). Full star count from me - this book gave me immense pleasure and I would love to read more such lovely books!

Kurzbeschreibung While traveling in France, young Patricia Franklin met and fell in love with the man of her dreams. Devastatingly handsome and rich beyond imagination, he was perfect for her. She entered his world, expecting to find everlasting happiness; and all was perfect, for a while. Then, in a single moment, a terrible tragedy occurred and their lives changed, forever. In spite of the lies, the false accusations, and a senseless death, she intended to marry him. Leaving him at the altar was not her choice. After learning his terrible secret, running away was her only option. She must flee France and return to America, telling no one of her past. *Andre Broussard was the second son of a very rich and influential family in Marseille. The feisty little American had stolen his heart, and he dared to go against the wishes of his brother by asking her to marry him. Ignoring the threats and the schemes against them, he openly courted her. Then, on what should have been the happiest day of his life she disappeared leaving him standing alone, at the front of the church, in front of all their friends. *As fate would have it, one evening, in the middle of Kansas, he found her. She was part owner of a quaint hotel and had made a good life for herself. But she hadn't expected to see him walk through her door. It made his heart soar to see the shock and fear etched on her beautiful face. He was angry and vowed to get his revenge. She would pay dearly for what she had done to him if he could simply get past her emerald green eyes and her fiery red curls.
