Reluctant groom for reluctant bride who's protecting her sonVon Ein KundeEdouard Gillett, the Comte of Trouville, is leaving France before King Philip decides to take more than his lands away. He is going to Scotland. Dairmid Hume is travelling with him, and while on the journey sells Edouard on the idea of taking a bride. Hume has a widowed niece holding an estate in trust for her ten-year-old son. He agrees to meet her, but will not marry her unless it is what she desires. She doesn't want to marry any man, but when Hume threatens to take away her son Robert, if she doesn't marry Trouville, she agrees. She'll simply have to hide Robert's deafness from Edouard. Anne soon finds her heart stolen by Edouard, but each time she decides to tell him about her son, the comte acts in a way that reveals that he dislikes imperfection. Lyn Stone has written a wonderful tale of love, trust and acceptance. The story is not predictable in the least and is full of lots of twists and turns. Von Davis0056 Perfectionist Edouard Gillet has angered King Phillip so he decides to lay low for a while in Scotland. He takes his young son with him who needs a mother figure to teach him the more genteel facets of life. Anne is far from perfect and she has a son many would view as 'the son of the devil' because he is deaf. Through a series of events they are married and fall in love, with Edouard admitting his love early and Anne holding off because she hasn't told him her son is deaf. It's nice to read a story where the hero and heroine are not the usual young and naive. Anne is in her late 20's and Edouard is a little older. Of course both have their secrets and each is hurt when they discover that the other has been holding back on the other.

Kurzbeschreibung SHE WAS ALL HE HAD EVER WANTED When Edouard Gillet, Comte de Trouville, wed the beautiful Lady Anne of Naincroft, he thought he had found his heart's desire. But was the passion he had willingly declared from the battlements shared by his newly pledged bride? Or would the unspoken secret still between them destroy their newfound happiness? Though it would break her heart, Anne prayed that Edouard would leave Scotland behind and return to the Court of France. For the longer he stayed, the greater the risk he would discover that her son was not all he seemed and the mighty comte was surely not a man who could accept anything less than perfection.

Autorenkommentar She was all that he had ever wanted.... Scots widow Lady Anne MacBain must conceal her young son's deafness until he reaches adulthood or see him lose his lands and title. She weds the wealthy, handsome Comte de Trouville, certain that he will immediately return to France and be the absentee husband she requires. After Edouard weds Anne, the exiled count has no desire to leave Scotland. His beautiful wife and this new life without court intrigue are much to his liking! Edouard thrives on perfection and he sets about to systematically rid Naincroft Castle of everything with a flaw. Will that include Lady Anne and her beloved son if he uncovers the secret?
