short one for the greatest fans of the "China Papers",...Von Miki101.Micha ... written by Peter May. This is a relatively dry and dull described murder investigation involving a young girl. The most interesting aspect here is definitively the cultural one. It is all about the strange marital rite from China's past: the Minghun, or Ghost Marriage. When in certain rural regions of China a young man dies unmarried, he will not be happy in the afterworld. No-one to serve him! But those ritual is maintained by very ancient-minded families in the 15-million-people capital Beijing. So if possible, the corpse of a young woman that recently died is bought by the grieving parents of the husband-to-be. Often involved in those macabre "transactions" are marriage agencies, with good connections to hospital mortuary or crematory personal. A fitting body can cost about 1.200 US Dollars! A very high price in China, but the highest price in THIS bargain payed the girl that was murdered to fulfill the creepy role. Chief Inspector Li Yan and American pathologist Margaret Campbell - well-known heroes of Peter May's 6 previous China thrillers, return in this short story. Which goes from a missing-person case straight to a murder investigation. One step after an other the Section Chief Li comes always closer to the person who killed and sold the poor girl. And the solution was - after a certain point - almost palpable for me. Horrible, but my worst fears came true! The story is not a must-read. It is short and a bit foreseeable, sorry. And the price for those 96 pages - a real short story - is a bit on the high side with Euro 5,99 - my personal opinion. For that price You buy a whole book, normally. But that has to decide everyone for theirselves...
